FPU BRINGS A TRADITION OF EXCELLENCE
TO THE ENGLISH DEGREE

ALUMNI SPOTLIGHT

Renee Beauregard Lute '10
Author of The Exceptional Maggie Chowder (Albert Whitman & Co., 2020) and the Winicker Wallace chapter book series (Calico, 2017), Chicken Soup for the Soul essays, and pieces in the Northern New England Review. She has an MFA from Hamline University and lives in the Seattle area with her husband and three young children.

“My time in the English department at Franklin Pierce prepared me to think critically about my own writing, applying the same critical lens to my work that I do to work by other authors. It’s made me a better editor, and that’s an incredibly valuable skill to have.”

ABOUT THE PROGRAM

We all communicate meaning through words, whether spoken or written for the page or screen. As an English major, you’ll be prepared to read, analyze, write, and edit texts about people grappling with the big questions of life – from relationships to religion to philosophy and beyond. By reading the great literature of the past and the newer voices of today, you’ll learn to communicate in a variety of styles and media. You’ll develop perspective and empathy, and be prepared to think, analyze, and communicate in any field you choose to enter.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

You will acquire skills in critical thinking and problem solving, knowledge of literary genres and styles, language, and interpretation. You will develop research and presentation skills as well as the ability to express yourself clearly in writing.

All English majors produce an electronic portfolio that demonstrates their achievement and preparation for graduate study and career fields. Students have pursued advanced study in English, creative writing, education, health administration, library science, business, and law.
